Michael F. Blake

Michael F. Blake, an Emmy-winning makeup artist in the Film and TV industry, is the author of three books on silent film actor Lon Chaney (which served as the basis for a 2000 documentary for Turner Classic Movies cable channel), and two books on the Western film genre. He has also written several magazine and newspaper articles, as well as made numerous appearances on documentaries. For his latest book, Michael spent three years researching Theodore Roosevelt's time in the Dakota Territory, which included hiking and horseback riding over the same land where Theodore rode 132 years ago. Unlike other authors who have written about Roosevelt's time in the saddle, Michael has real-world experience in herding cattle and crossing rivers on horseback.

Katie Ryan

Katie Ryan is a woman who wears many hats. She combined her love of horses and family with her experience of equine-therapy used to see her psychotherapy clients and Military families to publish her first book, Horse Wisdom Alchemy in 2013. Part memoir and part educational, her book is a collection of 100 years of horse stories, all true. Having grown up on a farm, Katie's obsession with horses is in her blood. Her father, an avid horseman, rode the Continental Divide on horseback seven years in a row along with the former governor of Minnesota.

Her second book published in 2016 is a murder/mystery: The Secret of the Blood Moon.

In 2016, Katie applied her talents to the motion picture industry to produce and direct a documentary, The Last Coyote: The Don Edwards Story which premiered at the Louisville film festival and most recently the National Cowboy Poetry gathering in Elko, Nevada.
